INTRODUCTION

This work is the outcome of a project launched by the Research Centre for the Study of Modern Greek History of the Academy of Athens with the permission of the Public Record Office of Great Britain in 1975. The project was originally planned by the late Eleftherios Prevelakis, Director of the Research Centre for the Study of Modern Greek History of the Academy of Athens. It was carried out under his guidance until his death in 1991. Dr. Elsa Kondogiorgi carried out the final revision of volumes F.O.78/194-196 and 220-221. The project is part of the Centre's broader programme to collect and publish foreign archival sources relating to modern Greek history of the 19th and 20th centuries.[1] The Centre has already published, among other works, four such volumes covering the period 1827-1839 in the series Abstracts of British Foreign Office Documents / General Correspondence / Greece.[2]

The programme has been based almost exclusively on material from British Archives, and from the Public Record Office in particular.[3] The reasons are twofold. Firstly, Great Britain played a leading, if not the principal role, in shaping developments in the Eastern Mediterranean from the post-Napoleonic era to the end of the Second World War. Therefore, any comprehensive study of the Eastern Question is, at least in part, a study of British diplomacy and cannot but draw heavily on British archival sources. Secondly, the British administration has a long and undisturbed history of bureaucratic efficiency. Rare accidents have occurred, but the bulk of the material is consistently classified, well preserved and catalogued, and easily accessible to researchers.[4] The Research Centre for the Study of Modern Greek History of the Academy of Athens has a large collection of microfilms of material covering its interests and continues to enrich this collection.[5] This project was based on the microfilms held at the Centre, which are also available to researchers who visit the Centre.

The microfilms of the correspondence between the Foreign Office and the British Embassy at Constantinople and major Consular posts in the Ottoman Empire reproduced for the Research Centre for the Study of Modern Greek History of the Academy of Athens to this date consist of 142 files from class F.O.78, covering the period 1819-1833 and 167 files from classes F.O.78 and 371, covering the period 1837-1912.

Only one project is based on material other than British: In 1982 work began at the Centre for the compilation in French of a descriptive list of the series Correspondance politique. Grèce. It consists of documents relating to Greece from the archives of the French Ministry for Foreign Affairs, covering the years 1707-1895. This project has been temporarily suspended.

ΑΚΑΔΗΜΙΑ ΑΘΗΝΩΝ

Ακαδημία Αθηνών / Academy of Athens

This publication contains a catalogue of Foreign Office documents in the form of a descriptive list. According the technique adopted, documents are individually identified as to their basic formal characteristics (position in the archival unit, date, sender and recipient, length etc.) followed by a concise description of their content. It is much closer to an index than any other method of publication.[6] A similar project had been undertaken in the past by the Portuguese Academy of Sciences of Lisboa with the collaboration of the British Academy and the Public Record Office. The result was the three-volume work Descriptive List of the State Papers Portugal 1661-1780 in the Public Record Office London, published in Lisboa between 1979 and 1983.[7]

The material of the descriptive list covers the period 1820-1833 and is a small part of the class F.O. 78 (Turkey).[8] This class contains drafts of instructions, original dispatches from the British Embassy at Constantinople and major Consular posts in the Ottoman Empire and correspondence of the Foreign Office with other Departments of State and individuals concerning the affairs of Turkey. A list of all the files of class F.O.78, with the chronological period and a definition of the type of documents that each file contains, is available in print[9] and on the web.[10] More detailed information relating to the content of individual documents is found in the Registers, which form class F.O. 605.

The material in class F.O.78 (General Correspondence. Turkey) is supplemented by material from the category Embassy and Consular Archives, class F.O.195. The list for this category exists in the List of Foreign Office Records to 1878 mentioned above. But this particular class has a large gap for the years 1808-1831, owing to the great fire that destroyed the British Embassy palace at Constantinople in the summer of 1831. Copies of the destroyed correspondence between the Foreign Office and the Embassy at Constantinople were made at the Foreign Office and sent to Constantinople in 1831 and 1832 for the archives of the Embassy.

Although the reasoning of the classification of the PRO categories is archival, the grounds for the selection of the material for this project require a historical justification. Thus, the selected files, namely files F.O.78/97-221, cover the period 1820-1833, the period of the Greek Revolution and the establishment of the Greek State. Unlike the case of the Abstracts of the class F.O.32, in which the beginning of the class coincides with the founding of the British diplomatic representation in Greece, in the case of this publication the selected files are, by archival standards, an arbitrarily selected section of the class. The first file of this section, F.O. 78/97, contains dispatches to the British Ambassador at Constantinople sent between mid-1820 and the end of 1821, relating to the outbreak of the revolution in the Principalities and in the Greek Peninsula and to other issues. The last file, F.O.78/221, contains dispatches sent to the Foreign Office by Ambassador Mandeville between November 1832 and the end of February 1833, dealing mainly with the Egyptian expedition to Syria. This reflects the overall character of the publication: although the motive for the selection of this section is historical, the archival logic of the classification of the records has not been interfered with.

When the project began in 1975, the Academy of Athens had already published the first volume of the Abstracts, based on the material from F.O.32 (Greece). It was therefore believed that the publication of the related material from the series F.O.78 (Turkey) would offer additional historical evidence to researchers. The material contained in this series of the Foreign Office archives is of unique value, since the archives of the Constantinople Embassy (F.O.195-198) for the period perished in the fire that destroyed the Embassy palace in the summer of 1831.

The importance of the material listed in these volumes cannot be over-emphasised. The period covered here witnessed the first serious challenges to the world order of the post-Napoleonic era and the initial phase of the Eastern Question. In 1820, the international situation was still the one established in 1814-1815. The British Empire was the undisputed ruler of the seas. Russia and Austria had established their predominance in continental Europe. But, liberal and national revolutions began breaking out in the South: Spain, Portugal and Naples in 1820, Greece in 1821. Ten years later, very little had remained unchanged. By 1823, the alliance system of Europe, invented to preserve the peace, had been undermined by most of its partners. But by 1827, a new Alliance was in operation, with an entirely different structure: Great Britain, Russia and France. Austria, one of the two leading powers of the Holy Alliance was isolated. The policy of Great Britain in the Eastern Mediterranean was subjected to her imperial interests in the Atlantic.

The underlying theme of this publication is undoubtedly the Greek question. Yet, the material offers invaluable information on other subjects too: relations of the Porte with Persia, Sardinia and other states, the Russo-Turkish war of 1828-1829, the Egyptian invasion of Syria in 1831, information on other regions of the Near East, e.g. Asia Minor, Egypt, Persia, Syria. Above all, the focus of the publication is the role of the British Embassy at Constantinople during the third decade of the 19th century. The numerous pages of the correspondence reveal the importance of its role and the high authority the Embassy enjoyed in the region. Lord Strangford exerted serious efforts to improve Russo-Turkish relations and to encourage the Porte to sign treaties with Persia and Sardinia. The role of Stratford Canning in devising a solution of the Greek question was limited by the constraints of the Alliance of July 6, 1827 and by the ill feeling occasioned in the Ottoman capital by the affair of Navarino.

Class F.O.78, and the documents listed in this publication in particular, have been used by many historians in the past. Scholars interested in British foreign policy of the post-Napoleonic era have searched the series for material to explain the foreign policies of the Liverpool, Wellington and Grey Cabinets.[11] Scholars interested in the initial phase of the Eastern Question have also based their research on the same material.[12]

Class F.O.78 alone does not offer a full picture of British foreign policy. Unless it is supplemented by other sources, both British and foreign, this picture is incomplete and biased. More important, this class does not place the Eastern Question in the broader context of British foreign policy decision making. There is no evidence, in the documents listed in this publication, of the close connection between British policy in Latin America and the Eastern Mediterranean. On the other hand, these documents cover a wide range of more specific local interests. Beyond the diplomatic and political history of the Eastern Question, subjects such as trade, piracy, the evolution of social, political and military institutions are touched upon in the correspondence.

Most of the correspondents were trained officials and astute observers of their environment. Their observations based on contact with a world whose political and social standards differed from those of the West are invaluable.

The 125 files catalogued here contain a total of 11,364 documents. Sixty files contain the correspondence between the Foreign Office and the British Representative at Constantinople. The other sixty-five files consist of the Department's correspondence with the major British Consulates in the Ottoman Empire (Constantinople, Alexandria, Preveza, Smyrna, Syria, Trebizond etc.), other Departments of State (Colonial Office, Admiralty, Treasury etc.) and individuals. A significant quantity of these documents has been published in extenso elsewhere. The treaties and protocols of conferences, for instance, were published in blue books presented to the British Parliament.[13] Many Greek official documents, such as constitutions, decrees and memoranda, have been published in Greek multi-volume compilations of sources.[14] No effort has been made to identify these documents for the purpose of this publication.

The descriptive list is a catalogue of all the documents. The documents are grouped by file and their archival order is preserved. Enclosures are listed after their covering documents, although chronologically anterior to them. A listing of the documents by absolute chronological order is compiled in the chronological index. The list of the documents contained in each file is preceded by the general description of the file, as it appears in the Public Record Office Class Lists, volume LII; the first and last dates of the documents of the file; the number of documents and the number of folios of the file; and the number of entries in the list. The distinction between the number of documents and the number of entries is necessary, because duplicate documents (either in the same or in different languages) are listed only once.

Each entry in the list is preceded by two numbers. The number on the left consists of two Arabic numerals separated by a bar and signifies the position of the document in the file: 140/28, for instance, is the 28th document of file F.O.78/140. A third Arabic numeral separated by a bar from the other two signifies the position of the enclosure in relation to the covering document: for instance, 140/28/1 is the first enclosure of document 140/28. The number on the right is the incremental unique identity number of the document. It is the reference number used in the list for cross-references and in the indices.

The description of the document consists of two parts. The formal description includes the date in both the Julian and the Gregorian styles, followed by the name of the sender, the place of origin of the document, the name and the place of the recipient, if known, the number, type, language and length of the document and its position in relation to other documents of the file. The second part of the description contains a summary of the substance of the document. The summary is based on the document's docket, wherever such a docket exists. In 1805, the Foreign Office had instructed its heads of mission to docket their dispatches. In 1824, these instructions were extended to Consuls. Other correspondence (consular prior to 1824, domestic and various) was docketed by the Foreign Office.[15] Enclosures, especially if they are copies, were rarely docketed. When no docket exists or when it is considered inadequate, vague or misleading, a summary is compiled by the editors with the use of the Register F.O.605/220, or from the contents of the document itself. However, even when dockets do exist, they are of unequal length and uneven accuracy. The editors of the list have felt obliged to reduce inconsistencies in length, style and substance and to correct mistakes in order to achieve a minimum degree of uniformity of style and clarity of substance. In some cases, very lengthy and wordy summaries have been shortened, as in the case of the dockets of William Meyer, Consul General in Preveza and Janina. In others, dockets were either entirely ignored or radically expanded. The reader is warned that the editors have endeavoured to correct the summaries that mistakenly reproduce the contents of the documents. But they have not interfered to correct errors contained in the documents themselves. These errors, factual or other, have been reproduced in the summaries of the list.

In the case of documents that appear more than once in the list, only the first entry has a summary. The other copies have a cross-reference to the first entry.

Information on the identity of persons is supplied either in the summaries of documents, or in footnotes. This information usually covers only the period covered by the pertinent documents. An asterisk (*) next to the number of the entry in the alphabetical index refers the reader to this information. The use of footnotes has been limited to the explanation of other chronological systems, to the identification of persons and collective bodies and to providing missing archival information.

The list is a reference work. It serves the purpose of a catalogue, and is not to be read from cover to cover. Therefore the editors have attempted to supplement it with as many finding aids as possible: A chronological index, and three alphabetical indices: an index of senders and recipients, an index of places of origin of documents and an index of names that appear in the summaries. Unfortunately, the lack of uniformity in the summaries is reflected in the alphabetical index. Meyer's lengthy summaries, for instance, have resulted in entries in the index respecting events in Albania and Epirus being more numerous than entries respecting other parts of the Empire. Short introductions preceding each index or footnotes explain their usage.

A serious effort has been made to attain an acceptable level of consistency in the use of place names. As a rule, the names used in the documents have been preserved. When, as happens quite frequently, the documents are not consistent, the compilers have selected the variation closest to modern Greek practice, e.g. Navarino instead of Navarin. In any event, the use of cross-references in the indices is intended to reduce the confusion.

In the spelling of names of foreign persons the compilers have followed the rules of modern transliteration, e.g. Christidis not Christides, Mavrokordatos not Maurocordatos. An exception has been made in the case of John Capodistrias, because this form of his name has already been widely adopted in western usage. The Greek B (which is pronounced v) is classified under V, e.g. Varvakis, J.

The dates of the documents vary in style, depending on their origin. As a rule, documents written by Europeans are in the Gregorian (new) style, while documents written by senders of the Orthodox faith are either in the Julian style or in both. For the sake of clarity the editors have used a dual system in the list. For the rare cases in which the hidjra dating is recorded in the documents, the editors have transferred the dates to the two Christian calendars, while recording the original date in a footnote. There are a few dates, whose style was impossible to determine. In those cases only one date appears in the list. In the chronological index, however, the document appears twice, listed both according to the old and to the new style. Wide angle brackets have been used for dates, senders and recipients, missing from the document, but inferred with certainty.
